One case of measles in the school is reported. That one is enough to get busy and fortify against an epidemic such as towns and cities are by are up against. With one case of a "whooping cough" epidemic which Bethel has just passed through so fresh in our minds, it seems as if a little effort might be made to keep our state clean of communicable disease.

What came near being a very serious accident occurred on the curve in front of H. Patterson's home Monday morning when a Nash sedan driven by Mrs. Coulombe of Berlin and carrying Mrs. Harold Nadeau, Miss Nadeau and Mrs. Coulombe's daughter, on their way to Lewiston, collided with a Lewiston Rubber Co. truck. All the ladies were more or less hurt, and both cars required wreckers to tow them to the village.

Varsity 31-0, Second Teams 27-0

The Gould Academy basketball team traveled to Gorham last Friday to annex two more easy victories. The game was featured mainly by strong defense play on the part of both teams. Gould stepped in a big lead the first quarter with an 8-0 score. The half ended 16-1 with Gorham still unable to score from the floor.

There were no individual stars for the winners. The team work was good at times but the locals had difficulty finding the basket.

After living on the Grover homestead for several years they moved to R. H. Danks, Calif., where Mr. Grover died. THE UNKNOWN SOLDIER Here an unknown soldier has been found. While far or near a mother's mourning A son that comes no more.

None is there to tell the tale Of how he lived or died If in the hell of "No Man's Land" Or asleep by a comrade's side.

None to say where he was born, If beneath northern or southern skies, We only know he gave his life For the flag beneath which he lies.

Unnamed, unknown, but not to him, Who watches the sparrows fall, When human flesh could bear no more He answered the last grand call.

While beneath the flag his body lies His spirit roams afar With others, who gave their lives To oppress the Gods of War.

Tis well that we should honor them, But shall they have died in vain? Must other wars destroy our youth? These blood foreign battle fields stain?

Alas, how comes from unknown graves A cry for eternal peace, And those whose names have given their all, Their names will never cease.

Carried from battle fields to here, To the eternal realm, No more shall good will treat The dead as if they were not there.

And shall come again, Bethel, W. M. Merrill.

VILLAGE RADIO USERS COMPLAIN OF INTERFERENCE

The Selectmen of the town have received a petition from some 60 of its citizens, asking if something cannot be done to eliminate the needless radio reception interference. The Selectmen say that they will do all in their power to help the situation. No doubt in the near future an expert will come and see what can be done. The suggestion that it would simplify matters if we could all work together for the common good, that is, if any of you know of any places where you think trouble may be found, if you would notify the Selectmen it may help to clean up the situation more quickly.

STRONG NORWAY TEAM TO PLAY HERE FRIDAY

Both Teams Have Won Two Games. Record Crowd Expected

The highly touted Norway High School basketball team will play their game at the William Blinham Gym court Friday night. Norway has annexed two easy victories, 25-12 over a team from Portland and a 25-23 split with the always first rate Oxford team.

The visitors will come with a veteran team and are confident of winning home the long and the short of the game.

The home team, however, have a couple of victories under their belt and although they have played weak opponents they may give the visitors something of a surprise. Some of the basketball skill offered the fans of Bethel on Friday and it won't be offered entirely by the visitors either, if the home team can start.

The second team game will begin at 7.30 and the variety game at 8.30. The price of admission will be as usual, 35 cents and 10 cents. The managers of the team are preparing to handle a record crowd for the last game before the holidays.

Forgotten Heroes
By Elmo Scott Watson

His "One-Man War"
IN THAT curious old chronicle, the "Forgotten Heroes," published in London in 1777 may be found this story of a dangerous individual to the world on this side of the Atlantic, perhaps never existed. Contrition and repentance can hardly soften the atrocity of his crime. Aiken, that universal created character, during the progress of his public ruin and desolation, had gone by several names—a plan generally adopted in a long course of villainy. Thus did old England pour out the vials of her wrath against the young patriot who waged a one-man war against the enemy and who all but succeeded in crippling the "Mistress of the Seas." He failed and he died a hero's death—a forgotten hero's death, for only recently has the story of James Aiken come to light.
The son of a Scotch blacksmith, Aiken came to this country at the age of thirteen to enlist in the fight for liberty. He was a member of the Boston Tea Party and after the Revolution he had been sent to the fleet as a gunner. He was a man of great energy and a low nature who would count most—at least Britain's sea power. He went to England in 1770 and for August to November of that year wandered from one port to another.
Having perfected a crude time bomb—it was a tin tea caddy filled with spirits at the bottom and fitted with matches and candles to ignite them—he succeeded in setting fire to the rope house at Portsmouth, although the attempt on the hemp house failed. Then he went to Bristol and a series of fires in the vessels and wharf buildings in which ships, ammunition and war supplies were kept up in smoke followed.
Finally suspicion fell upon the young Scotchman and a reward was offered for his arrest. There followed a thrilling chase from Bristol to Exeter to Plymouth to the Isle of Man and then to Dublin where he was caught with incriminating evidence concealed upon his person.
He was placed on trial March 6, 1777. Unrepresented by counsel and refusing to speak in his own defense, Aiken was found guilty. He was paraded past the scene of his crime in Portsmouth, then banged on a gallows made from the mast of a warship. Later his body was taken down and removed to Blackhorse Point where it hung in chains for several years—a gruesome reminder of the fate which befalls a patriot who fails.

HOW

SCIENTIST GOT FIGURES OF THE EARTH'S WEIGHT
After seven years of laborious work, Dr. P. H. Hegl has completed a wonderful pair of scales, designed for weighing the earth.

You might expect that scales for this purpose would be of tremendous size. Actually they are quite tiny, and the most important part of them is a tungsten wire one-thousandth of an inch in thickness. So delicate is this balance that it is kept in a basement room, and protected from vibrations by treble walls. We cannot, of course, weigh the earth as a whole. A method which has been used with success is to measure the gravitational pull exercised by comparatively small objects whose weight is known. The pull the earth exerts upon the moon and upon its other neighbors in space can be found, and from this its weight may be calculated by comparison with the results obtained in the laboratory.

By means of his tiny scales, which he calls his "cosmic balance," Doctor Hegl finds that the earth weighs the very respectable figure of six thousand trillion tons, or, if you like to put it in figures, six followed by twenty-one noughts.

How Cut Flowers May

Be Kept Long Periods
Cut flowers are sometimes preserved for a considerable time by dipping them in perfectly limpid gum water and allowing them to drain. The gum forms a coating on stems and petals that is said to preserve color and shape. To crystallize flowers, grasses, etc., alum is used: Dissolve 18 ounces of alum in a pint of water, boiling the solution in a close, tinied vessel over a moderate fire, keeping it stirred with a wooden utensil until completely dissolved. When it is almost cold suspend the flowers by means of a thread from a stick placed across the top of a deep glass or earthenware jar into which the solution is poured. Leave the flowers in this for 24 hours, and when they are taken out, lay them in the shade until dried. The whole process is best conducted in a cool solution. If the solution is used too cold, the crystals are likely to be too large; if it is too hot, the crystals will be too small.

How to Clean Spark Plugs To clean spark plugs simply dip the lower part of the plug into alcohol or any liquid media, which will allow it to stand for a few seconds, take a piece of wire covered with the thickness of cloth and rub the contact from the insulator, then wash clean and dry thoroughly before reinserting in the engine.
Cleaning a plug in this way is far better than taking it apart to clean. In cleaning the sparking points use emery cloth or a knife. In cases where the electrode is badly worn and when the insulator is coated with deposits it is of no avail. It is then better to install new plugs.

How Birds Find Worms
Many people believe that birds such as robins locate earthworms in the ground by hearing them. The fact is birds find their food chiefly by the sense of sight. Their behavior in rocking their heads while searching for worms and other food on the ground leads some to conclude that the sense of hearing is involved, but this gesture on the part of birds is merely to aid in seeing. Birds can see best when a single eye is pointed directly at the spot or object to be examined. They have a poor sense of smell.

How Weather Affects Rocks
The rocks of Bryce canyon have been variously described as sandstones, shaly sandstones, and sandy shales, says Nature Magazine. Probably the first diagnosis was made in very dry weather, and the third after a heavy shower. It has been said that in dry weather a hiker in Bryce leaves no tracks, although horses break through the surface crust.

How Oil Filter Functions
The oil filter removes abrasives and foreign matter from the oil before they can damage cylinders, pistons and other internal parts of the engine. The operating manuals recommend that the filtering unit of the oil filter be renewed at from 8,000 to 10,000 miles of operation.

How to Clean Sea Shells
Apply a mixture of hydrochloric acid and water, or wash the shells with a stiff brush in cold salt and water, with a little soap powder; a little chloride of lime will improve them; then put the shells in the sun to dry and bleach.

TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HENRY

A MAN'S RELIGION

There is nothing effeminate about the Christian religion. One must be every inch a man to follow Christ. It was a man's job to tackle the Scribe and the Pharisee, to take the part of the poor and the outcast, to set aside tradition and superstition; to brave the wrath of a Jewish priesthood and a Roman State. None but a hero with the consciousness of approval of God could withstand the persecution and abuse that were heaped upon Him. None but He could carry that cross up the rugged path of Calvary. Following Him were men like Matthew, Peter, James, Paul and the rest who went to their death in defense of their faith in Him. There was one weak man. He forsook Christ and betrayed Him. We still have the weak brother with us. We need not go back to Judea and Judas to find him; nor do we have to go back to Paul and Palestine to find the strong. There are men today whom wheel and wrack, and fog, and torch and arena, and cross would not affright; men who stand four square to every wind that blows; men who have a right to wear the name, "Christian."

D. GROVER BROOKS, Bethel

Out of the Depths
By Duane Jones

ROSS MERVIN paused a moment before he went up the rickety stairs that led to the room where the "Squid" Sam would rent him a bed for the night for the sum of ten cents.

He caught sight of a slight, girlish figure staggering along the street toward him. She stopped suddenly with groping hands. "Something wrong?" he asked gently.

"I guess—I'm blind! My eyes—" were the whispered words he caught. Her wide eyes did seem sightless to him. He took her arm quickly under his. "Perhaps it is just for the moment. I'll be glad to take you home if you tell me where to go."

She was a slight thing, and pretty under other circumstances. Ross thought. He learned in that brief but eventful walk that she had been studying art in the city, but success had not come her way. The Christmas rush in the stores had given her an opportunity to earn money. The lights had bothered her after the strain her eyes had been under in her studying and that night on her way home darkness deeper than the night had come over them.

He suggested getting in touch with the police, but she begged him not to. "I have my rent paid until Sunday night, and if I rest tomorrow my eyes may be all right. After that—after that—"

A rigid faced landlady came to the door. In a moment Ross glimpsed the situation. The woman heard the explanation with a scowl, and he decided to wait until he had seen the helpless girl to her room. Then he said quietly:

"Look after her well, and I will see that you are paid."

"She has her room paid until Sunday night. After that the city will take care of her—unless she has the cash Sunday night. You look like a bum to me, but if you get the money, all right," the woman said shortly.

Ross smiled. "You have my number, but I'll have the money. Be good to her. She's a mere kid and up against it."

"So am I," she replied sharply.

The next morning early he was at an agency. He stepped to the desk just in time to hear a man say, "That's no job for me!" and go on.

"I'll take it," Ross agreed.

The clerk smiled. "This job is driving a truck for the construction company at Millburg. The truck carries explosives for their dynamiting."

For two days Ross drove the truck. Saturday night he received his two days' pay and hurried to 30 East street, paid the girl landlady rent for another week, and talked for one long happy hour with the girl he had vowed to aid.

Her eyes had improved a little, and under his quiet determination she agreed to rest during the coming week.

"I don't see why you are so good to me," she said hesitatingly at parting.

Her hand sought his. "But—your voice out of the darkness—I know! O, I know!"

The next week, the fates seemed to take a hand in remodeling his life, and one event followed another speedily.

He looked up from his engine to see his father's fur-coated figure and hear him say:

"Land, one of my engineer friends here spotted you and told me. It's almost Christmas. I feel that I have been unjust to you—but won't you come home?"

Ross' mind lingered on the word "Christmas," and he said simply, "I will—if I can bring some one with me. No, not my wife, but a girl I hope to make my wife."

So it came about that one eventful evening Ross bent over a pale, flower-like face and looked into dark eyes to which a great city physician had brought the blessing of sight; and she said:

"Dear, what a dream it seems! This beautiful home—and you with me! And just a few weeks ago, you and I down—" "In the depths, sweetheart. I began to climb out the moment I saw you that night."

"And you took me with you—the chime of far-away bells broke into her words with distant music—'what are those bells?' she asked wonderingly.

He touched her lips with his. "Christmas bells, little girl, ringing out the old for us—forever!"

Acquaintance on Train

Wife's Former Husband

In a smoking compartment of the Twilight Limited, bound from Chicago to Detroit the other day, a Chicagoan and a Detroit man and speedily became acquainted as people will on trains. Houser Muessey, who is authority for the story and touches for his truth, said the two men soon reached the point where they were trading their opinions on life and living.

The Chicagoan was cynical about women, and said so. "You can't trust 'em," he declared. "I was married once and my wife left me for another guy. I follow I never can. An experience like that is enough to teach a man not to trust women again."

"Well, I don't feel that way," said the Detroit man. "I'm married. I've been married for several years, and my wife and I get along very well. Of course, she's an exceptional woman. She'll be at the station when we get to Detroit, and I want you to meet her. You'll see your ideas about women are wrong."

Arriving here, the two men continued their conversation. The Detroit man walked up to the waiting room to meet his wife. The Chicagoan followed him. He stopped, the Chicagoan flushed, muttered something about seeing a friend across the way, grabbed his bag from the red bag and was off. The Detroit man didn't know that his acquaintance of the train was his wife's former husband—Detroit Free Press.

Vast Water Resources

in Black Hills Region

One of the most productive water-bearing formations of the northern interior of the United States is what is known as the Dakota sandstone, which crops out about the flanks of the Black Hills in southern South Dakota. The formation extends eastward and northward to the borders of Iowa and Minnesota.

As the sandstone slopes away from the Black Hills, the water percolates northeastward and eastward through the porous rock and underneath a dense covering of thick clay shale. Beneath the James river valley it is under considerable pressure, and where the surface altitude is not too great, strong artesian flows have been obtained. In fact, the artesian wells are among the greatest natural resources of that area.

However, so many wells have been drilled, the supply shows signs of having been taxed about to the limit, and the forces of many of the wells has fallen considerably below the original pressure.

Death Adder Fourth in

List of Deadly Snakes

The Australian death adder is said to have long been an unobscured bad name. Perhaps the death adder was the most venomously poisonous of Australian snakes. N. W. M. Souter, director of the Botany department of the University of Sydney, states that it is not nearly so fierce as some of the other snakes. The average person will say it is not so dangerous as the cobra or the rattlesnake. The fact that the bite had little effect on him prompted inquiries to seek Mr. Souter's opinion. Mr. Souter stated that he would have been surprised if the man had died, as he would not have expected it to be so deadly. The most deadly is the tiger snake, capable of killing a healthy man in 10 minutes. Next comes the brown snake, a potential killer in two hours. There are also Mr. Souter's black snake, which can make man or beast sick for 12 to 24 hours and gives him a chance of life. Then the death adder and other varieties.

Sports Improve Posture

While the sports of the day are important for a good posture, sports have a great deal to do with it. In the case of the back, it is the most important part of the body. The back is the support of the head and neck, and it is the base of the spine. The back is the most important part of the body, and it is the base of the spine. WHY

Fighters of White Plague Adopted Emblem

It was at a meeting of the international conference on tuberculosis held in Berlin in 1906 that Doctor Gerson of Paris first of all the modern tuberculosis fighters, the "white plague" fighters, actually, for the legend of the cross is so anciently a part of the human mind that it dated back to the birth of the human race. From the earliest times, the cross has been a symbol of the Christian church. In the Eastern church, the cross is a symbol of the Christian church. In the Western church, the cross is a symbol of the Christian church. In the Eastern church, the cross is a symbol of the Christian church. In the Western church, the cross is a symbol of the Christian church.

Why Excessive Fatness
Overstrains the Heart

Obesity is a factor in the production of high blood-pressure; so when the doctor reduces the fat man's weight, he usually sees his blood-pressure fall. Every collection of fat cells has small blood-vessels which supply them. It has been estimated that every pound of fat requires six inches of a mile of blood-vessels. A man who is twenty pounds overweight is carrying round twelve miles of extra blood-vessels. No wonder his heart is strained! No wonder, either, that the life insurance company demands a much higher rate when the applicant is overweight. If one takes the trouble to look over the life-expectancy table of the fat man, he understands the old joke's remark: "Eat, drink, and get fat and tomorrow you die." and "The belt line is the life line—reversed."—Dr. Ralph H. Major in "The Doctor Explains."

Why Dog Is Called "Flea"

Discussing why a dog is called "flea" Pathfinder Magazine says: "This word is only a colloquialism or provincialism and varies widely in its spelling. Dictionaries recognize at least four spellings—fist, fiste, fiste, and flea, preference being given to fist and flea. When spelled 'fist' that is, the 'f' is long as in 'fist' and the 't' is sounded. When it is spelled 'fiste' it is pronounced 'fiste' rhyming with 'fist'. It is a small dog of no particular breed, but is generally applied to dogs of the terrier type. The word is supposed to be derived from 'flea dog', from the obsolete word 'flea', meaning to break wind."

Why Salt Helps Goldfish

Salt water has been found an effective remedy for affixing goldfish. These fish sometimes float on their sides on top of the water or otherwise act unnaturally, and a white fungus growth often can be seen on their bodies. In such a case, a tablespoonful of salt should be added to a quart of water and the fish placed in the solution for two or three minutes, then transferred to a bowl of fresh cold water. The treatment is continued until the fish act naturally as popular St. Louis Magazine.

Why It Is North River

The Hudson river is called the North river when it reaches New York because in the territory known to the early Dutch explorers there were two great rivers—the Hudson and the Delaware. They called them simply the North river and the South river. The name North river has survived as a local appellation partly because it is in kind with the name East river for the arm of the sea on the other side of Manhattan.

Why Honey Crystallizes

With such a high percentage of sugar it is little wonder that honey crystallizes. This depends on the arrangement of molecules and the temperature. Dextrose, or cane sugar, as it is commonly called, is the main sugar of the group; but it is not so crystalline as fructose, which has a large proportion of dextrose as from alfalfa, vetch and rapeseed crystallize more quickly than those which have most levulose sugar.

Why Groom Has "Best Man"

Tradition relates that a best man was employed in the Stone age. The bridegroom swooped down upon the toms of the bride and stole her away while the best man diverted the attention of the bride's father.

Why One Becomes Thirsty

The pneumogastric, or tenth cranial, nerve supplies the stomach with the desire. When the body becomes dehydrated, or the amount of water runs below normal this nerve conveys to the brain the sensation of thirst.

Delayed Letter Gave

Great Son to "Nassau"

Delay in the delivery of a letter to Princeton university, a distinguished son who later became its president, according to family papers recently brought to light. The graduate and recipient of the delayed letter was Rev. Ashbel Green, eighth president of Princeton, and the papers those of the great-grandson, Ashbel Green.

The documents revealed that the future President Green wrote to a friend at New Haven for information about Yale. No answer came, and in the meantime another person had ascertained "the state of Nassau hall," which apparently was pleasing, and young Green matriculated there. Two years later the long-expected letter from New Haven arrived. It had been lying in a post office.

"Had I received it seasonably," President Green wrote, "I should certainly have gone to Yale and not to Nassau hall. Now here is the point toward which my long preamble has been tending—the whole of my subsequent life has taken its complexion and its course from the college with which I then became connected. Thus, my son, the overruling providence of God often assigns us our allotment in this world, not only without our consent, but in opposition to it and the disappointment of our fondest wishes."—New York Times.

Unchanging Demand for

Silver in the Orient

Colonial America used Spanish pieces of eight as well as British silver coins. In 1794 the mint struck off the first United States silver coins—half dimes, half dollars and dollars. Two years later the silver dollar and quarter appeared. From 1873 to 1897 a trade silver dollar for use in China was struck off, and from 1897 to 1898 appeared a silver three-cent piece.

Orientalists have developed a genuine affection for silver. The metal is so malleable that it can be easily worked by artisans. It can be beaten to a thickness of one one-hundred-thousandth of an inch.

Until 1893 Indians could exchange silver for rupees at the Indian mint. In prosperous years excess money of the peasants was used to purchase silver which they fashioned into jewelry for the female members of their families. In lean years the silver objects were exchanged for rupees at the mint to keep the wolf from the door. Although the mint discontinued the exchange the Indians' affection for silver has not waned. Indian brides still are ashamed to face the public without silver ornaments. The silver market in China and India booms when prices are good and many marriages take place.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

All He Noticed

The usual crop of motoring cases was before the magistrates. "It is a fact," said the chairman of the bench to a nervous looking witness, "that the defendant's car went round that dangerous bend at 35 miles an hour."

"Yes, your worship," said the witness. "I was quite that speed."

"Now, sir," said the chairman, "would it be possible for you to tell the court what gear the defendant was in?"

The witness gazed in astonishment at the chairman.

"Well, now you're asking me something," he said. "But as he was traveling so fast I wasn't able to get a clear view of it, but I did notice that he had a bowler 'at on and a red scarf."—London Answers.

Rats and Plagues

Rats in Europe for centuries were responsible for the spreading of plague. This disease, carried by fleas on the black rat, was not exterminated by improved sanitary conditions so much as by herds of brown rats from Asia, which entered through Russia about 1890. The black rat was driven to the wharves and ships by this stronger rival. But eventually the brown rat forsook human company and lived principally in sewers, thus relieving Europe of plague.

Self-Examination

Just the other day I heard a man who was very angry at some one who had done him a grievous injury and he was struggling to get his feelings under control so that he could be impartial and fair in his judgment of the case who had hurt him.

"I want to fully examine myself when I am calmed down," he said, "to make sure that there is no justification for what was said about me."—Exchange.

Find in Desert Caves

Stir Among Scientists

In a sand-filled depression near the ancient Pyramid of Degrees, seventeen miles north of Cairo, Egypt, a wonderful discovery has been made by the Egyptian department of antiquities.

Several stone statues were found in a heap at the top of a large sand-filled depression, some distance from any building. Their attributes, costumes and attitudes indicate that they are Syrian deities. On the other hand, their workmanship seems to show the hand of an Egyptian sculptor of the Persian or Hellenistic period. The largest statue represents a fat, seated woman, wearing a high turban. Others represent a man in Chaldean costume, and a woman, both standing in rigid attitudes, with their hands extended forward, while a man's head with a large beard seems to come from a winged bull.

The rarity of figures of western Asiatic gods gives considerable importance to these figures. They further possess historical significance, as they were probably made for one of the foreign colonies which were so numerous at Memphis in the later pre-Christian period, and of which hitherto so little has been known.

Old and New Commingle

on Streets of Madeira

Madiera has been aptly termed "The Enchanted Isle," and still deserves its poetic title in spite of a recent landslide which occasioned considerable loss of life and property. Madeira is a land of sun and flowers and blue skies which has become highly popular as a holiday resort with those of means and leisure. What struck me most about it (writes a correspondent), was the extraordinary survival of customs at least five or six centuries old alongside modern methods and improvements. Up and down the narrow, twisting streets of cobble, patient pairs of bullocks still graze as they strain at sleds laden with passengers or merchandise, and driven by men or boys in picturesque native costume, while the most modern motor car, and motor buses, carry natives between Funchal and the villages of the hinterland which past them at a quite incredible pace.

Railroad Construction

Railroads were first built across the country instead of north and south because water transportation on the large rivers, such as the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, etc., ran in a north-south direction, and the building of cross-country transportation routes to connect with the commercial centers along the rivers was a natural outcome. As emigration pushed farther westward these lines were extended to meet the demands of progress.

Birth Records in Canada.
The clergy of the Catholic church in Canada have been keeping registers of baptisms, mar-three centuries ago. No other country in the world can offer such a series of birth records, systematic of the study of Canada's vital statistics.

The Faeroes

It Takes Two Months to Dry a Codfish in the Faeroes.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WIND SERVICE.

THE bleak, wind-swept Faeroes are a wild place, the dream of regular mail planes, for a new landing field is planned for accommodation of planes which will fly the proposed America-Denmark air mail route.

The Faeroes, numbering twenty-one small islands sprinkled over a small area about 250 miles off the northern tip of Scotland have remained practically unchanged since Viking days.
Modern civilization can find no foothold on their windy cliffs; there life exists only when modeled on ancient, primitive patterns. And so the handers, forever wrestling with sweeps and winds, have little time for tourist or his money.

Each of the islands rises from the sea with flanks as sheer as a ship's side and with a plateau top, flat like ship's deck. In all the Faeroes there is only one sandy beach of a hundred feet or so, a beach which is considered such a remarkable gift of nature that the big island of Sandanes has its name from the tiny strand.
Basalt cliffs rise majestically on all islands. Some tower nearly 2,000 feet above the restless sea, and against the black barriers the Atlantic sends its mighty waves, to break with excessive force and burst into probably the most remarkable clouds of spray to be found in all the world.
There is probably the bleakest island of them all and therefore visitors never land there. But the effort to reach these dwellings are of ancient type, customs have remained down unmodified, and it is such a colony as Left Eriksson has planted. There is no not even a store. Low stone huts, half sunk in the ground and girded by outer stone walls to oppose the violent winds, cling to the rocks. Sheep graze at will.

Live in "Smoke Rooms."
The poor is Vidara that only one of the dwellings that belong to the schoolmaster, a very great man indeed, has a "smoke room." Such an extravagance for the average Vidara dweller, lives with his family in a "smoke room" or a converted smoke room.
Smoke room, which was once typical of rural homes in the Faeroes still survives in many, harks back to the huts of the Vikings. Usually it is large, since it is often the only room in the house, except the bath below it for horses and cows, must serve for the entertainment of the neighbors as well as for all other uses. Around the room there are no windows; only the entrance and those that open on the original "pullman beds," which may be double or triple-deck.

The center of the room stands a stone forge on which burns peat or, rarely, brown coal, and above the forge a wooden chimney, which is some, but not all, of the smoke is outside air. Converted smoke rooms with modern improvements have stove where once the open fire burned, and a skylight glass window once an aperture in the roof, overlooked in good weather, suffered from light.

Like the schoolmaster his his room" and is the only man of the island with a glass room, nearly all the houses on Stromo Island have rooms, and in Thorshavn, the capital itself, the communal stove has been left out in the new, less concrete houses.
The glass room is an appendage of smoke or stove room, having glass walls. Usually it is a parlor and part of an earlier day, can be only on state occasions—for a dinner, or a marriage, or a reception of a guest. Generally the unpleasant contains the family's only furniture, such as a table, a few chairs, a vase with paper flowers, and pictures on the wall.

Recently the glass room is opened and the stranger usually visits the family living room, with stove, to these parlors, which forth the cold, musty odor of a closed for many years.
Like Their Food "High."
The stove room serves, of course, as dining room. Sheep, fish, and are staples with the islanders.
But two are common enough to people. The method of preparing the food for the table in the stove room is so primitive northwest, the islanders prefer "high" and to satisfy this desire they skinned sheep in an open shed a year before eating it. The preparation requires a crust like came-bert cheese. This is pared off, each man using the knife which he carries constantly. The highly tinned meat beneath the crust the natives eat raw.

Similarly, whole blubber must be soaked for a month or more before the family makes high feast. Other eggs, of course, receives different treatment. Newly caught fish are cleaned and dried and dried and dried—until they become so hard that one's teeth can make no impression. But with a strong hammer the islander will powder his durable codfish on a stone and eat its dust, so to speak.

No one goes to the Faeroes, the west-ernmost island of the Faeroes, unless the trip is necessary, for it has the most violent surf. Myggenaes consists of a main island, supporting about 125 inhabitants who raise sheep and catch fish. Cursed it is by winds and waves, for the storms that leave Newfoundland and Greenland gather all their forces and loose them here. The rest of the Faeroes and Europe get the first and worst.

At the very western end of the island is a holm, or islet, separated from the main block by a cove 75 feet wide. At the outer point of the detached piece stands the western-most lighthouse of the Faeroes. Its beacon blazes out 413 feet above the sea. At the foot of the lighthouse cliff, their foundations melting year by year in the tossing waters, are two pinnacles of rock on which in summer the gametrans rest.

Life in the Lighthouse.
The lighthouse is operated by a Dane, who lives with his family in a house sheltered behind the lighthouse.
The keeper tells of the awesome storms of winter, when a screaming, whistling blackness descends on the island and the sea lifts up higher, higher, and higher on their rock; when the suffocating blast of stinging salt spray that no living creature can stand against rages mercilessly.

But more telling even than his descriptions is the heroism lamp which hangs from the ceiling of his living room. It has a large glass with a hole on either side, as if a shot had passed through. During one winter storm a wave that rose up the cliff dashed over the precipice, a pibble which broke his window, passed through his lamp, and struck against the wall. He shows visitors the water-worn stone, which he retains as a keepsake.

The farmer-fishermen of the north islands like Myggenaes and Vidara are self-supporting, living on the fish of the sea and the sheep on their barren, almost independent of what the world has to sell or wishes to buy. Different conditions obtain, however, in the southern and more populous islands, where extensive fisheries have long been operated. A decline in this major industry has been occasioned by many factors. The modern equipment by steam trawlers elsewhere, newer and quicker methods of packing used in Newfoundland and Norway, and a reduced world demand resulted in a recent extensive program of aid by the Danish government. Figures show a tragic loss of trade; but to a new owner, Sidero appears to have all the fish any island could possibly wish. On bright days the rocky shore is white with the codfish which are Sidero's chief stock in trade.

Across of fish is everywhere, snail-ing up the first Faeroe machine.
Fish follow the shore line as if they had been cut up by the sea. They cover a slope like slates of white fish meat—a thickly sighted A line, two hooks, and some fish or bird interest for bait, are all the gear a native needs. When his boat has been anchored, over the line, and in come the fish. For the novice, there is a thrill in pulling in a five-to-ten-pound fish, but it is an old story to the islander.
Fish are cleaned at once and salted down. Often a ship will return to port with 250,000 pounds of hand-caught fish. Again it will go out and never return at all. These are brave men who go to sea for cod. Each year hundreds of island fishermen lose their lives at their trade. Each grim cliff is the tombstone of some schooner and her crew.
Once safely back in port, the schooners unload their fish, which are passed on to women out on the pier, who bend over huge vats of water, scrubbing the cod clean. Pictures of these arduous workers are obtained only with great difficulty, for in the Faeroes, as elsewhere, women do not want their pictures taken unless they are dressed in their best clothes.

PRAYER FOR CONTENTMENT

Almighty One, I ask of thee
To keep my heart from envy free.
And give me open eyes that see My blessings—I beseech.
And may I always be aware Of every hour that's free from care—And thankful be, for each!

And with the dawn of every sun, Give me a task that needs be done—
And let me feel that I'm the one For whom that task was meant!
With health, and love; with work and play, A few good friends—let me, I pray!
Be happy and content!

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

Here's wishing a Merry Christmas to everybody and especially to the office force of the Oxford County Citizen. I am making the wish early so that it shall reach them without fail in time to act as seasoning for their Christmas Goose.

Mr. and Mrs. Wendell Roberts of Locke Mills were week end guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Felt, and family.

"Bob" Farrington has gone on a visit to Massachusetts where he will be the guest of his uncle, John Lindley, and family during the Christmas holidays.

Sunday was unusually warm for the time of year. Many people were out walking, autos filled with young and old were out to enjoy the day, while overhead an airplane passed, headed in a southerly direction.
Gayden Davis and party returned Friday afternoon from their hunting trip at North Newry, bringing in a large handsome deer.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Andrews and Miss Minnie Stevens were in Norway shopping recently.

Mrs. Florence Benzon spent the week end at Bryant Pond at the house of her brother, J. B. Farrar.

Mrs. Amanda Frost (Curtis) of Waltham, Mass., and a former resident of South Woodstock, is housekeeper in the family of Jerry B. Farrar of Bryant Pond. Mrs. Curtis has many friends in this place, many of whom have called on her at her present home at Mr. Farrar's.

What was my delight, one morning just a few days ago, to discover a real snow house erected by the school children near my home. It gave me great pleasure as it brought back to my mind a snow house containing three rooms built by my oldest brother, our cousin who was visiting us, and myself. The house was fashioned out of a long deep drift and was used as a winter playhouse for several months and where we went to get warm after a cold sled ride from this long deep drift to the ice covered river below.

George Davis has been at home several days recently, as the boiler at Main's mill at West Paris where he works has been passing a safety test.

Albert Buz was making business calls in this place the past week.

Archie Hodgkins, who has been living in the old Captain Stevens house, has moved his family to the home of Mrs. Josephine Thurlow near Bryant Pond.

Lawson Felt secured a nice deer recently near Picked Point Hill, Edwin Perham one from Curtis Hill, while Ernest Crocker from Curtis Hill got a very large deer near the top of Molly Ockett Mountain.

Gerald Davis was caretaker at the home of Gayden Davis the past week during the absence of Mr. and Mrs.
Davis.

We are sorry to hear that the little Harlow boy, who is suffering from a broken leg resulting from an auto accident, is not as well. Internal injuries seem evident.

WEST PARIS

The churches will unite Sunday evening, Dec. 20, at the Universalist auditorium, and will observe the spirit of Christmas with the beautiful pageant, "Shine, Christmas Star." The various committees have plans well arranged, and music will be given by three separate choirs and a male quartet. There will be several moving tableaux representing the nativity scenes, and a large decorative Christmas tree will be donated by Mr. and Mrs. G. W.
Ridlon.

Mrs. Russell Bethell and son Cameron of Fryeburg are guests of Mr. and Mrs. James Wright.

The Bates Literary Club will meet with Rev. E. B. Forbes Friday afternoon, Dec. 18.

E. D. Stillwell has been ill for several days and confined to his room. He is reported gaining. His daughter, Mrs. Albert Bowler of Bryant Pond, and son, Edward D. Stillwell of Portland, have visited him.

The Helping Hand, class of the United Parish Bible School have elected officers as follows:

President—Miss Minnie Day
Vice-President—Mrs. M. E. Williams
Secretary—Mrs. Henry Noyes
Treasurer—Mrs. Charles Bane Leonard Chesley is at the Central Maine General Hospital for treatment.
Justus Millett was at Millerville, Newry, last Thursday to attend the funeral of his brother, Frank Millett.
Edwin H. Brown is in poor health.
He suffered an attack of indigestion and cold from which he has not made good recovery.

ALVIN HOLSTER LOVEJOY
Alvin Holster Lovejoy passed away Saturday morning at the home of his daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs.
Harold H. Gammon. Mr. Lovejoy was the son of Christopher and Betsey Burges Lovejoy, and was born in Rum-ford May 27, 1841. He was united in marriage with Miss Mary Small of Rumford, who passed away many years ago. Three children were born to them, Elizabeth, wife of Robert Reemits of Bryant Pond, Charles A.
Lovejoy of Portland, and Alice, wife of Harold H. Gammon, with whom he lived. He is survived by two grandchildren, also great-grandchildren.

Mr. Lovejoy enlisted in Co. F, 29th Maine Regiment, and served until the close of the war. He was the last surviving civil war veteran in this part of the town. He was a Universalist in faith. He was a quiet, home-loving disposition, yet always gracious and kindly to his callers, whom he greatly amused by his humor and ready wit.

He retained his interest in the affairs of the town and nation until his last illness, which was only of two or three weeks duration.

The funeral was held from the Universalist church Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock, Rev. Eleanor B. Forbes attending. The Daughters of Veterans attended in a body. Interment was in the family lot in Abbot's Mills cemtery. Many beautiful flowers expressed their message of love and sympathy.

Something useful first, then perhaps it may be beautiful, if only from the thought which prompted the gift.

Asches and or snowdrift, when sprinkled on the icy step or sidewalk may save a broken limb. Even the family doctor does not want a patient with a broken hip, where in many cases a long life of suffering must be endured.

Dried yeast is as satisfactory in the treatment of pellagra as from yeast, says Hygeia Magazine. Other foods that are recommended for pellagra sufferers in regions where food is unobtainable include liver extract, canned salmon and canned lean meat, all of which contain the anti-pellagra vitamin after they have been cooked for several hours.
